Dagmar Werner

Post Production Editor

dagmar.werner@bbc.co.uk

Profile

Dagmar is one of BBC Scotland's most versatile editors, bringing a strong blend of creative, editorial and technical expertise to each project she works on. She is equally at home cutting long-form network documentaries, shaping observational material into exciting stories, or preparing inserts for fast-turnaround magazine shows.

Dagmar started her career working for the ARD network in her native Germany. She spent ten years in Belfast working as a freelance for various facilities houses, independents and broadcasters including the BBC, Channel 4, RTE and UTV.

Since coming to Scotland in 2002, she has worked across all genres. Above all, she is passionate about interesting stories, told with skill and imagination.

Recommendations

Dagmar loves her job and that is evident in the work she does. Technically she is very skilled, fast and creative, but most impressively she completely engrosses herself in the story and the narrative - which makes for an exciting collaboration at such a vital stage of the production. I loved my edit with Dagmar.

Louise Lockwood, Producer, What Do Artists Do All Day

Dagmar is an excellent editor to work with. She's very strong editorially - great at knowing what you need to tell a story, and how to tell it. She engages with the subject and the characters completely and on top of that she's great fun, very organised and very quick.

Ishbel Hall, Producer, Ceramics: How They Work

Dagmar was absolutely brilliant in the offline. She's not just a technically excellent editor - her grasp of structure and narrative was vital to shaping the piece as a whole. Plus, she's just a great person to work with - relaxed and good-humoured.

Bill MacLeod, Producer, The History of British Pathé
